9–20 Nov. 2026

The climate crisis is a crisis of culture.

It is the result of human behaviour, rooted in how we consume, what we prioritise, and how we understand our place within the planet's ecosystems. Shifting these patterns and fostering lasting change requires culture itself to be part of the conversation.

Join us for a performance and panel, the first of two COP31 events bringing together voices from climate, culture, and health to explore how the arts can support health related impacts of climate change.

Featuring a musical performance by Flow (EarthSonic), an international collaboration of women artists that turns lived experiences of water, health and territory into music.

The session builds on a newly published Arts, Health and Climate Policy Brief by WHO and the Jameel Arts & Health Lab.
