China continues to send military aircrafts, warships and balloons in areas around Taiwan

According to the statistics released by Taiwan's Ministry of National Defense, a total of 298 Chinese military aircrafts, 136 warships and 57 balloons were detected around Taiwan in January. Among which, 58 aircrafts crossed the central line of the Taiwan Strait and its extended line. While in February, Chinese warplanes continues to operate daily in the Taiwan Strait and often cross its central line that previously served as an unofficial barrier between the two sides. Report shows 8 air balloons sent on Feb. 9 has

	crossed the Taiwan Strait, which also hit the single-day record. This heavy-handed and unreasonable act by China, as well as its virtually daily flying of surveillance balloons into Taiwan’s airspace since Taiwan’s presidential election, have gravely impacted regional aviation safety and cross-strait peace and stability, signifying a change to the status quo across the Taiwan Strait. Taiwan’s government urges the international community to pay due attention to this matter and jointly demand that China promptly negotiate with Taiwan on the activation of these new flight routes.
3	Taiwan condemns China’s unilateral announcement on the current flight route Without holding prior consultations with Taiwan in accordance with International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) regulations, the Civil Aviation Administration of China unilaterally announced on Jan. 30 the revocation of the 2015 cross-strait agreement on the M503, W122, and W123 flight routes. This action not only seriously jeopardizes aviation safety, peace, and stability in the region but also undermines mutual trust and the status quo across the Taiwan Strait. ICAO’s Air Traffic Services Planning Manual clearly stipulates that changes to any route network should be made only after coordinating with all parties concerned. China’s announcement of changes to a related route network without prior consultations with Taiwan constitutes a serious violation of ICAO regulations and underscores China’s irresponsible authoritarian nature.
4	Taiwan welcomes European Parliament resolution for deepening Taiwan-EU trade and investment cooperation The European Parliament (EP) overwhelmingly passed a resolution on the security and defense implications of China’s influence on critical infrastructure in the European Union (EU) on Jan. 17. The resolution expresses concern over China’s increasingly aggressive stance toward Taiwan and in the South China Sea. It also reiterates the EP’s long-standing support for deepening trade and investment cooperation between Taiwan and the EU. The resolution points out that China’s overwhelming control of global rare earth supplies poses an enormous risk to the European defense sector and economic security. Noting that the adoption of the European Chips Act will increase the EU’s ability to produce semiconductors, the resolution also calls on the European Commission and EU member states to bolster cooperation with like-minded partners to jointly create semiconductor and critical infrastructure supply chains in the EU. Additionally, the resolution highlights Taiwan’s significant role in global supply chains and the international order and endorses the signing of a Taiwan-EU bilateral investment agreement and any arrangements mutually beneficial to bilateral trade and investment.

5	US National Security Advisor Sullivan underscored the importance of cross-strait peace and stability US National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan underscored the importance of maintaining peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait during a meeting with Wang Yi, Director of the Office of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and Foreign Minister of China, in Bangkok on Jan. 26. Taiwan’s presidential elections on Jan. 13 demonstrated the maturity and continuity of Taiwan’s democracy, receiving congratulatory messages from more than 100 countries. Mr. Sullivan’s remark reaffirms the reality and status quo across the Taiwan Strait that has long been recognized by the international community.
6	US Senate passed US$95 billion foreign aid bill for Taiwan, Ukraine and Israel The US Senate passed a US$95.34 billion foreign aid bill in a 67-32 vote on Feb. 8. The bill calls for US$4.83 billion for Taiwan, US$61 billion for Ukraine and US$14 billion for Israel, and the rest for other partners in the Indo-Pacific. In regard to the bill, Senator Chuck Schumer pointed out that it is a good first step since the bill is essential for US national security and its friends including Ukraine, Israel, Taiwan, and for humanitarian aid for innocent civilians in Gaza.
7	NATO Secretary General showed concern on China’s military buildup NATO’s Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg stated at a joint press conference on Jan. 29 that “today it’s Ukraine; tomorrow it could be Taiwan.” This showed his concern over the Taiwan Strait. He urged countries to take seriously the consequences for NATO security arising from China’s military buildup and the fact that the war in Ukraine is bringing China and Russia closer. It is highly significant that following the 2023 NATO Summit last July. Secretary General Stoltenberg has continued to express concern over security and stability across the Taiwan Strait and called on NATO member states to accord due attention to the challenges that China poses to the rules-based international order.

It accepted the People’s Republic of China’s false narrative concerning the so-called “One China principle” in the joint communiqué signed on the resumption of Nauru-PRC diplomatic relations. Taiwan solemnly stated that the joint communiqué in no way changes the sovereign status of Taiwan as its democratic achievements, evidenced by the smooth completion of its recent presidential election, have proven to the world that neither the Republic of China (Taiwan) nor the People’s Republic of China is subordinate to the other.
