Subject: Nomination of members to Committees for Risk Assessment and Socio-economic Analysis under the REACH Regulation

Your Excellency,

We are writing to address a matter of importance concerning the implementation of our European chemicals legislation, which falls under the remit of the European Chemicals Agency (ECHA). Effective implementation is essential for a greener, safer, and more competitive Europe. It ensures the highest protection against hazardous chemicals and fosters innovation across Member States, as well as a unified European approach to chemicals safety. ECHA plays a pivotal role in these processes and relies on the work of its committees and working groups, in particular the Committees for Risk Assessment (RAC) and Socio-Economic Analysis (SEAC).

These Committees are pillars of scientific scrutiny and evaluation within the EU's regulatory framework for chemicals. They deliver transparent, independent, and high-quality scientific opinions, providing a solid basis for decision-making, contributing to the protection of human health and the environment, and enabling the free circulation of chemicals on the internal market. Their role is crucial in regulating chemicals with direct impact on citizens' daily life and health <sup>(1)</sup> and in maintaining the competitiveness of European industries, by ensuring that the implementation of regulations is consistent, scientifically robust and economically viable.

We would like to flag the current challenges these committees are facing, in regard to their functioning and resourcing. The tasks assigned to them over time, and particularly since 2020, have been increasing in complexity and scope, necessitating a diverse array of expertise and sufficient capacity.

<sup>(1)</sup> for example bisphenols, lead, glyphosate, chemicals in tattoo inks, microplastics and the current proposed ban on Per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS).

According to the EU REACH Regulation<sup>2</sup> Committee members are nominated by Member States, who are required to provide support and technical assistance to the members of the committees. But ECHA is currently confronted with a historically low level of committees' membership. Some Member States have not nominated members to these committees. It is therefore imperative to address this situation, which poses significant challenges to the committees' ability to fulfil their mandates. In recent years, ECHA's Management Board, which includes members representing all EU Member States, as well as the heads of Member States' competent authorities have expressed strong concerns in this respect.

Some measures have been taken to enhance the Committees' efficacy and workability, including increasing membership and the adequacy of compensation for the authorities employing the committee members. But despite these joint efforts that the Commission has undertaken with ECHA, the continued effectiveness of the committees hinges upon the active engagement and support of Member States.

We are extending our thank you for your valuable contribution to date. At the same time, we kindly ask all Member States to nominate two candidates per committee, ensure adequate support for such nominations, and that candidates possess the requisite qualifications, expertise and working time, to serve as effective and active members. ECHA stands ready to assist Member States in identifying suitable nominees for RAC and SEAC, as well as to support members as they carry out their role. Your commitment and contribution would significantly contribute to the sustainability of the EU's regulatory framework for chemicals, the protection of health and the environment, as well as well to the sustainable competitiveness of the European chemicals industry.

We appreciate your attention to this matter and look forward to your positive response.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Yours sincerely,
