At least 70 flights have been cancelled and several others delayed at Amsterdam's Schiphol Airport due to wintry weather, a spokesperson said on Sunday.

He said snow plows started clearing snow at the airport early Sunday morning and that Schiphol was expected to be operational again around midday. However, there might still be delays.

On the final day of the Dutch winter school holidays, a light layer of snow covered parts of Amsterdam.

Schiphol warns of flight delays, cancellations amid snowy weather

Schiphol Airport is facing significant disruptions on Sunday due to winter weather conditions, with numerous flight cancellations and delays expected. The airport is advising travelers to closely monitor up-to-date flight information.

A Schiphol spokesperson confirmed that about 70 flights have been removed from the schedule, primarily affecting flights to European destinations. The spokesperson further warned that a "messy day", full of disruptions.

Snowplows began clearing runways early Sunday morning. However, runway operations remain limited at the moment, and the spokesperson noted that full operations are not expected to resume until early afternoon.

Sunday's weather issues coincide with the final day of the Christmas holiday period, traditionally a busy time for the airport. However, the spokesperson stated that passenger traffic at Schiphol remains "manageable" and emphasized that the airport is still accessible due to the ongoing preparations.
