From commitments to implementation

The climate and health agenda has advanced significantly over the past decade. Landmark initiatives, declarations and partnerships have strengthened understanding of the health impacts of climate change while elevating political commitment to action. Most recently, the Call to Action of the Pan-European Commission on Climate and Health (PECCH) reinforced the urgency of translating ambition into tangible results.

About the event

As attention shifts from commitments to implementation, this event will explore practical pathways for advancing climate and health action. Drawing on Arctic and Nordic experience, Indigenous leadership and health-system innovation, the discussion will focus on practical solutions, implementation capacity and measurable progress.

This session will be moderated by
Katrín Jakobsdóttir,
Chair of the Pan-European Commission on Climate and Health (PECCH) and former Prime Minister of Iceland
